STUDY ABROAD
Studying abroad at African and Caribbean universities can provide excellent opportunities for Africana Studies students to advance their knowledge in the international sphere of education, business, language and culture, technology, and political economy. For those students who desire to spend a semester, academic year, or summer abroad, visit: http://studyabroad.arizona.edu. Students must contact the Africana Studies Department at least one year prior to their desired Study Abroad experience. Call 621-5452 for further information.

WINTER & SUMMER COURSES
Africana Studies offers numerous General Education courses during the Winter and Summer sessions. These courses are open to any students who need to satisfy the University General Education requirements. Call 621-5452 for further information.
The term Africana in Africana Studies connotes the extensive range of scholarship in various academic disciplines on Africana communities in the United States, Central and South America, the Caribbean, Africa, and other regions reflecting the African Diaspora. Africana Studies focuses on methods, concepts, theories, and other scholarly paradigms in studying, examining, analyzing, and researching the genesis of the unique history, sociology, political economy, philosophy, literature, culture, psychology, and identity of these Africana communities and their interactions with other peoples and groups.

The Africana Studies Program offers two degree options: a Major in Africana Studies or a Minor in Africana Studies. Also, students may double-major in Africana Studies along with any other major on campus.

Students should consult with the College of Humanities Academic Advising Center prior to declaring an Africana Studies Major or Minor. The College of Humanities Academic Advising Center is located in the Modern Languages Building, Room 345. To schedule an appointment, please visit the College of Humanities online advising system at w3.coh.arizona.edu/advising or call (520) 621-1048.

Sample courses* taught in Africana Studies:

Africana Society, History, Politics, and Economics
- AFAS 207: African American History
- AFAS 345: Caribbean Politics
- AFAS 440: The History of African American Women from Slavery to Freedom

Africana Philosophy, Ideology, and Identity
- AFAS 304B: The Social Construction of Race: Blackness
- AFAS 315: African/African American Psychology
- AFAS 344: African American Religion
- AFAS 381: African/Indigenous Religions

Africana Literature and Culture
- AFAS 230: Introduction to African Literature
- AFAS 306: African American Autobiographies: Women and Their Histories
- AFAS 314: Caribbean Literature and Culture
- AFAS 318: Pan African Dance Aesthetics
- AFAS 320: The African American Slave Narrative: History and Literature
- AFAS 342: Writers, Women, and the Gods
- AFAS 373: Hip-Hop Cultures
- AFAS 439: Blacks in Hollywood

*See the UA General Catalog for a complete list of AFAS courses: http://catalog.arizona.edu

Africana Studies majors prepare students for four major vocational tracks:

Education There is a critical shortage of trained teachers in our state and nation.

Business and Economic Development Businesses and organizations that economically sustain Africana communities are critical. Students acquire skills that may even eventually lead to studying for the MBA.

Public Health There is a critical need for health practitioners that serve Africana communities.

Aesthetics Preparing students for vocations in the areas of dance, music, theater, and media, is vital for the spiritual invigoration and social uplift of Africana communities in particular, and the nation in general.

Additionally, Africana Studies degrees are excellent preparation for vocations in the diplomatic corps, international relations, law, counseling, social work, and graduate study for those interested in pursuing doctoral degrees in academia.